PSYCHO-EDUCATION TOOLKIT: HOW TO HELP CHILDREN UNDERSTAND AND REGULATE THEIR SURVIVAL RESPONSES

This psycho-education toolkit for children & young people is a beautiful, creative resource for any adult wanting to support children and young people to understand their survival behaviours. The animation, together with the child-friendly worksheets provided as part of this resource, offers a way to both understand and explore how children have learnt to manage stress, and how those 'old' coping strategies might be helped to calm.

The two-part animation uses beautiful imagery and children's voices to tell the story of the Survival Animals inside all of us. In this story, you will meet:

- Tiger (our fight survival mode)
- Cheetah (our flight survival mode)
- Rabbit (our freeze survival mode)
- Sloth (our collapse survival mode)

Part One introduces each of these four relatable animal characters. The story helps children and families to understand how and why we each have survival behaviours, and how each of the survival animals work hard to keep us safe from danger.

Part Two introduces a new animal filled with wisdom and calmness - Orangutan. Orangutan has many ideas for how to tame the Survival Animals and she talks us through lots of techniques and strategies which help to calm the nervous system.

WHAT ARE THE LEARNING AIMS?

This tool kit helps children and families to understand that:

- We have an internal alarm system which alerts us to real or perceived danger
- Children who have experienced trauma and loss have an 'extra-sensitive' alarm system
- Our alarm system 'wakes up' survival behaviours in all of us, which are designed to protect us from hurt
- Our survival behaviours were helpful at one point in our lives, but over time, they can cause us many problems
- We can learn how to tame our survival behaviours so that we can feel more in control of how we are and how we feel
- Children need the help of adults around them to do this tough work

HOW DOES IT WORK?

On receipt of payment you will be emailed:

- A welcome video by Dr Shoshanah Lyons, Clinical Psychologist, introducing the animation and the toolkit.
- A private link and password giving you access to the two-part animation, which lasts 20 minutes in total.
- A 'children's pack' which includes a range of beautiful worksheets to accompany the animation, and can be printed as many times as needed. The worksheets provide a creative, child-friendly framework for exploring with children and teens their survival behaviours.
- An adult resource pack, which provides you with explorative questions to inform your conversations with the child or young person.
- A display kit, providing you with ready to print and use images perfect for making a wonderful visual display about the Survival Animals inside all of us.

Once you have purchased this resource you will be able to access it for an unlimited amount of time.
